The Course (GLS 362-D3: Study Abroad in Italy/Greece BUS)

This course explores the role of Greece and Italy in the European Union. It attempts to identify the regional, political, social, legal and economic dynamics of the region as they relate to both countries. The term "balkanization" was coined in this region to illustrate the complexities and difficulties to proceed with economic, social, political and legal prosperity. The seminar includes topics such as the role of Greece in the regional economy, entrepreneurship and development in the region, Monetary Union, immigration and urbanization and international organizations (NATO, WTO, EU, etc.). In particular the course will explore the relation between Greece and Italy (history, culture, business relations, etc.). Although Greece and Italy fought on opposite sides in World War II, both countries have mutual respect and a shared historical past that shapes both cultures. The course will attempt to explore the present status of the relationship and future prospects. Moreover, the course will compare and contrast the recent financial crisis between Greece and Italy as both are members of the European Union.
