Course Description

In this course, we will follow Darwin's footsteps as we observe first-hand how natural selection is studied by modern day researchers. The trip begins in the capital city of Quito, Ecuador, where we will spend two days exploring the old city including standing on the equator. From Quito, we will fly to the Galapagos Islands where we will spend eight days living on the Golondrina, a sixteen passenger boat, on an itinerary that will take us to nine of the Galapagos Islands. We will hike on the islands and snorkel in the ocean to experience a landscape and an ecological community that is found nowhere else in the world.

Itinerary Highlights

- Observing penguins, sea lions, marine iguanas, giant tortoises and countless other animals in their natural environment
- Snorkeling through tropical waters with diverse marine life
- Hiking into the craters of ancient volcanoes
- Crossing the equator and visiting the artisanal market in the historic district of Quito.
