Course Description

Charles Darwin's theory of natural selection is foundational to the field of biology, and his time on the Galapagos Islands shaped the development of his theory. Today, the Galapagos Islands provide researchers a natural laboratory where they can observe the evolution of plants and animals on the islands in real time. We will follow Darwin's footsteps as we observe first-hand how natural selection is studied by modern day researchers. We will spend eight days living on the Colondrina, a sixteen passenger boat, on an itinerary that will take us to nine of the Galapagos Islands.

Itinerary Highlights

- Observing penguins, sea lions, marine iguanas, giant tortoises and countless other animals in their natural environment
- Snorkeling through tropical waters with diverse marine life
- Hiking into the craters of ancient volcanoes
- Crossing the equator and visiting the artisanal market in the historic district of Quito.
